GETTING A STAND FOR CLOVER.

I find a few farmers who are sowing clover seed alone in the Spring preparing the ground and harrowing it in light soil. This is in the West, an open, loose, black soil. Col G. W. Waters says he has had good success with like farmers who have tried this plan and has yet to find one who has failed to get a good stand, while others were very common where they sowed on grain. Where sown alone it is the way, the cover should be used to clip the weeds soon after they start, so as to let the clover get ahead of them. The past season by managing in this way, Mr. Waters got a crop of hay the same year he sowed the seed. I also find some who seed with oats on the usual cover crop, and others who plant their Mother's Friend allays Nervousness, and so assists Nature that the change goes forward in an easy manner, without such violent protest in the way of Naive Headache Etc. Gloomily forebodings yield to cheerful and hopeful anticipations—such passes through the ordeal quickly and without pain—is left strong and vigorous and enabled to joyously perform the high and holy duties now devolved upon him. Due to life of heat as caused by the use of "Mother's Friend," and the time of recovery shortened

I know one lady, the mother of three children who suffered greatly in the birth, and was wholly disabled of Mother's Friend, and was relieved quickly and easily. All agree that their labor was shorter and painless.

It is pretty safe to say, Sow on Grain very early in the Spring, on a frosty morning, when surface is honeycombed. This for timberland or upland. You prune soils until dry enough to harrow and harrow seed in or sow with oats, or alone. Don't stint the seed. Put on a bushel to five acres at least or even more. Sow carefully with a good machine. The days for hand sowing are past. A Caution seed will do the work perfectly, sowing 21 feet wide or more at every passage. I have used ours 27 years. A man said to me the other day that many poor stands in his neighborhood were due to the carelessness hand sowing. But, you see, machine can handle the seed on when the tools are just right. If you have land that is too run down to grow a crop of grain and give a stand of clover, too, and you haven't the manure to top dress it, I would try sowing with clover alone, making the soil very live and manuring lightly the poorest spots, if possible, at the same time. Missouri, where I am now, is fast waking up to the value of clover. The agent of P. F. of Arden told one of our men that during the last two years the amount of clover seed sold by dealers there had grown steadily from 20 bushels to 200. Everyone I hear words of praise to the P. F. for waking up the farmers in this direction. It is considered as one of the leading questions at our Institutes also. After reading the above, I am afraid I have no one under one point to offer. Part of that clover sown alone gets a stand that enable it to go through hot, dry weather after harvest time. It gets its roots down before the dry weather comes. It grows on the Spring mountain. Sown with a heavy crop of grain it makes a very feeble growth, perhaps. And then when the grain is cut it is too dry and hot for it to start several years, and it dies.

DEMI PLOWING LTC.—The same friend asks if it is best to plow run-down land deeply that it is only been skinned over before? Well, I cannot answer positively in your case. We have been bringing up a farm that was run down and never had been plowed deeply, and we know that a gradual deepening of the soil by plowing little deeper each year, as you have done, has been of great benefit to us. I believe that generally the soil will be true. It is best to submit to the action of frost and sun and sun. We get more loosened up so we can plow it out and stir it around. Thus we intend more plant food or make it available for our crops. It is now the time to make for yourself. Increase depth of plowing very gradually. The probably are that you will see results that will cause you to keep on. Your soil and subsoil has considerable of clay in it, as has nearly all of ours. On light, sandy land it would be different, of course.

It will help "level land" to tile drain it, where water has to evaporate from the surface, where there is no natural underground, and the soil of rolling land too. "Why were you so afraid of rain after sowing?" I asked. "I said that it needed rain to start the seed." Is it best to make it so dry?" It certainly is best for the young plants to make a fine and firm for the good of the wheat. The plants cannot start and grow as well in roughly prepared ground. The little roots cannot get food as well. I was not afraid of rain, but of heavy rain that would pack and run together the dust like so, and wash much down the hill side on our rolling land. I have had every bit of wheat along with the soil taken right out of the drill rows on a hillside by a heavy rain after drilling. There would not be so much risk on rough prepared land. But that is not so bad for the wheat. So we make it bad and take the risk. Now don't you see? T. B. Tatum in the Practical Farmer

LEARNING TRADES—An exchange remarks "young men are learning trades in the pentecostal than outside of these because we are trying to make clerks, doctors and lawyers of the material intended for blacksmiths, carpenters and other trades. For the most part, however, the truth in the latter part of the statement. Boys are eager to avoid the labor of life, and too anxious to follow some calling that does not soil their hands. Most boys should be taught that there is more dignity in manual labor than in loafing and more honor in toll than dependence. The farm and the shop often bring more profit than the office or the counter. All the work, worry and profits are not as ways to the farmer and the laborer."

ONLY A JOKE—Father—"Come, young man, get your coat off and come with me." Son—"Tommy! You're not going to kick me, are you, dad?" Father—"Certainly. Didn't I tell you this morning that I would settle with you for your bad behavior?" Tommy—"Yes, but I thought it was only a joke, like when you told the grocer you were going to settle with him?"
